

SIGNS

That Your Pet Needs to See a VETERINARIAN

When assessing your pet's health and/or illness, a good rule of thumb is always to watch for any dramatic behavioral shifts. Contact your veterinarian if you notice any of the following signs lasting more than 1-2 days:

Lameness or abnormal movement;
Displays of mild to moderate pain (such as crying when a specific area is touched or action is taken)

Lethargy or loss of energy; Weakness

Frequent and/or inappropriate
urination; Diarrhea; Constipation

Poor Appetite;
Excessive salivation;
Excessive thirst
(increased water intake)

Behavior changes;
Neurologic signs

Vomiting, Wheezing
or frequent panting

Excessive scratching or dull, dry, or flaky hair coat;
Nasal discharge or congestion;
Eye discharge or redness

When in Doubt?

Please see a veterinarian for ANY condition that appears resistant to treatment or seems to be getting worse.
